Daily Update: For any contract, it's the words on the page that matter; both how the language is used and how it will be interpreted by the company. It's the Negotiating team's job to ensure the final CBA states the exact intent of what's needed to take care of our brothers and sisters for the next few years. Today, your team took on the tedious job of verifying that all the i's are dotted and the t's are crossed. We are trying to bargain fairly with ULA on OT selection/OT wheels and directing OT, ensuring the final contract will reward our members for the lifetime of service they've given to ULA. Next, we start preparing for our economic passes at the bargaining table. Our mission remains the same - to bring home a contract that allows us to take care of our families, recognizes our sacrifice and expertise, and honors the work we do.
